APR (Annual Percentage Rate) is an illustration of the cost of borrowing over a year taking into account the interest rate and any additional fees. You can use the APR to compare the cost of similar products.

You pay interest for borrowing money on a credit card. We work out interest daily and add it to your account on the next statement date. You can see how much interest you've been charged by checking your monthly statements or online banking.

When a rate is advertised as variable, it means that it could go up or down.

When we advertise our products, we use representative rates to show what the majority of customers may be offered.
